DACHON, P.

fl. Lille 1752–57

M. Scheppers, the son of a merchant in Lille (according to the Annales, affiches et avis divers, 1755; he was probably Louis-Joseph Scheppers (1734–1795), son of a marchand graissier, himself a future director of the chambre de commerce), had discovered “l’art de fixer le pastel et de l’emballer même au lieu de l’altérer”; this he confided to a painter in Lille, named d’Achon, of whom Ratouis de Limay knew nothing further. He must be the P. Dachon after whom Beauvarlet engraved a posthumous portrait (medium unspecified) of Père Pérussault, to be sold by veuve Chéreau & fils. A pastel from 1752, showing the P and D of his name monogrammed together, shows a similar quirkiness. An oil copy of a painting of the Présentation de Jésus au Temple by Jouvenet, signed and dated “P. d’Achon 1757”, is in the church of Saint-Léger de Sancheville (Schnapper & Gouzi 2010, p. 248); misread as d’Archon in some sources. Dachon was in fact appointed, together with a M. Le Tillier, as one of the two drawing teachers at the École gratuite de dessin established by the magistrates of Lille in 1755. They immediately ran into trouble for organising life classes without permission from the police. Le Tillier’s response to the magistrates resulted in his brief imprisonment, and the two artists left Lille and were replaced by a M. Gueret and Louis-Joseph Watteau de Lille. It seems likely that Dachon returned to Lille, and is the Pierre Dachon, négociant à Lille who, on 4.VI.1767, was fined 300 florins for having allowed the trade of bourgeterie to be conducted outside the town; he successfully appealed, restoring the textile process to Lille. He was probably the Pierre Dachon who married a Marie-Anne-Joseph Hubert in Lille; both were dead by 1781, but their son Pierre-Auguste-Joseph Dachon (1764–) married in Lille, 28.XII.1796.
