AUBERT, Louis

Paris 15.V.1720 – p.1790

Louis Aubert, a professional musician as well as an artist, was the son of Jacques Aubert (1689–1753), first violinist at the orchestra at the Opéra, member of the Académie royale de musique, associated with Mme de Prie and the duc de Bourbon-Condé, who was parrain at the artist's baptism at Saint-Sulpice, 25.V.1720 (Mademoiselle de Charolais was marraine); his mother was Marie-Louise Lecat. Louis's younger brother Jean-Louis, known as the abbé Aubert (1731–1814), was a poet, musicologist, writer and correspondent with Claude Pougin de Saint-Aubin (q.v.); a profile portrait of him, known from an engraving by Jean-Baptiste de Lorraine after "Aubert" (according to the lettering) is by Louis: the advertisement in the Journal des beaux-arts, 1770, p. 572 specifies "dessiné par L. Aubert, son frère". Another brother, Étienne-Louis, succeeded Jacques Aubert as violinist in 1746. In the registres de clôtures d'inventaires for their father (AN Y5327, 16.VI.1753), the minor children listed were Jean-Louis, Estienne-Louis and Marie-Louise (in 1755 she married Antoine-Édouard Magimel, an orfèvre and échevin de Paris; she died in 1810); "Louis Aubert, officier du roi" was included in his own name and as tutor to the minors, while "Jean-Louis Aubert peintre", "Jean-Jacques Aubert employé dans les affaires du roi" and Françoise Aubert (represented by her husband Jean-Baptiste Renaudin de Vassy (1714–1784), marchand de vin, bourgeois de Paris) were the older children.

In a document (AN Y4596^a, registres de tutelles, 28.I.1742; contrat 4.II.1742) hitherto overlooked, but confirming Aubert's close association with the artistic circles surrounding the Bourbon family, "Louis Aubert officier de la Chambre du Roy fils du Sieur Jacques Aubert aussy officier de la Chambre du Roy et cy devant Intendant de la musique de feu S.A. Monseigneur le Duc et de D^elle Marie Louise Le Cat sa femme" was approved (by her guardians, including the marquis de Lassay, Louis Angran de Fontpertuis, the parrain at her baptism at Saint-Nicolas-des-Champs in 1723, and Claude and Jean-Baptiste Glucq) to marry Marie-Roze de La Faye, 18½ years of age, the natural daughter of Voltaire's friend Jean-François Lériget de La Faye (1674–1731), de l'Académie française, soldier, diplomat and (like Glucq and Fontpertuis) a notable collector, associated with the comtesse de Verre. It appears that the bride had been living with the Aubert family in rue Saint-Honoré, Jacques being her tuteur. As provided in her father's will of 5.IV.1724, she had a dowry of 20,000 livres and an annuity of 1000. (Aubert's signature on the document matches those found on his drawings.) It is difficult to believe that Aubert's interest in art was not encouraged by such contacts.

On 19.V.1748 a daughter, Marie-Victoire was baptised at Saint-Eustache (registeres paroissiaux). On 27.III.1757 a second daughter, Charlotte-Hypolite, was baptised there; her parrain was François-René-Charles de La Tour Dupin, marquis de Montauban, and the marraine, Françoise-Hippolyte Lériget de La Faye, Mme Aubert's niece (and Montauban's future daughter-in-law).

Louis the fils, as he was known, himself entered the orchestra at the Opéra at a very early age (perhaps as early as 1728), and was nominated to the Vingt-quatre violons du roi in 1732, although he was only officially appointed in 1746; the salary in 1749 was 365 livres, while at the Opéra, he was earning some 700 livres. He published a number of violin sonatas (1750, dedicated to Madame Adélaïde, herself a violinist) and six symphonies (1755). He continued to practise as a professional musician while working as an painter and draughtsman. His artistic output appears to have stopped when he succeeded his father as leader at the Opéra in 1755, a post from which he retired in 1771. The Mercure de France for I.1760 recorded the public donations of silver to the mint to meet the costs of war: among the fermiers généraux, secrétaries du roi, présidents and duchesses listed as donors his contribution (of about 14 kilograms) was very respectable (v. Jeffares 2017). In 1774, after 40 years of service he was awarded a pension on the Maison du roi of 1365 livres. In 1780 he was living in the cloître Notre-Dame, paroisse Saint Jean Saint Denis. He was still drawing his pension in 1790 (the exact date of his death is unknown).

He used pastel to enhance three-crayon drawings of genre scenes which have been attributed to Chardin; they are however unlike the work of any other French pastellist of this period, and are closer to pastels of the Dutch school in theme. The mixture of ink, natural chalks and pastel is unusual, and several of the interiors depict shafts of sunlight which are also rare. Nevertheless, both the attribution and technical description of the recorded works should be considered unreliable, particularly in view of the numerous homonyms. A Louis-François Aubert, peintre en émail du roi, died 27.X.1755, rue du Four, paroisse Saint-Sulpice (registres ds scellées, AN Y14316). He may be the nephew of François Marteau, graveur en médailles, aged 15 when he was apprenticed to Charles Clément, orfèvre joaillier in 1736, and could perhaps be the artist commissioned in 1745 and subsequent years to decorate the apartments of the Dauphin at Fontainebleau, Versailles and Compiègne. Some of these pictures were engraved by Duflos, Basan and others. A pastel, apparently signed and dated 1781, but in fact a copy after Greuze, is not by this Aubert. He has been confused with the engraver Michel Aubert (1704–1757). A Louise Aubert, from Paris, was a pupil at the Académie royale from 1758 to 1765, under Vien.
