AVED, Jacques-André-Joseph

Camelot

Douai 1702 – Paris 1766

A pupil of Bernard Picart in Amsterdam, Aved worked in Belle's studio in Paris, where he met Van Loo, Chardin, La Tour, Perronneau and Liotard. He was a member of the Académie royale (agréé 1731; reçu 1734), and was an important portraitist in a manner that has led to some of his works being attributed to Chardin. He was also a significant collector (owning nine still lifes by Chardin at his death) and was a dealer in paintings and other works of art. Although he worked mainly in oils, he made a number of drawings and even some pastels, of which only one has survived. This intimate portrait of his wife is of outstanding quality, with an intensely realistic treatment of the face, while the fabric of the dress is only lightly drawn in.
