DROUAI, François-Hubert

Paris 14.XII.1727–21.X.1775

Studied with his father Hubert (q.v.) and with Nonnotte, Van Loo, Natoire and Boucher. Probably the Drouais awarded third prize at the école de l'Académie royale in .1.1745; first prize in 1748; agrée in 1755, reçu 1758; conseiller 1774. He was successful at court, and his social and artistic celebrity withstood Diderot's disapproval of his superficiality. As a painter of children he was unequalled (although there are clear influences, e.g. in his portrait of the young Mlle Helvétius, c.1755, drawing on Carle Van Loo's oils of Rosalie, the future Mme Bron), and he executed a wide range of paintings of young ladies in mythological roles. There is a distinctive flat lighting on the forehead and nose of his faces, combined with a good sense of colour and a sure line.

Under his father's guidance, it is to be expected that François-Hubert would have executed a number of pastels, although in practice few if any autograph pastels have survived among the numerous lists of copies of his paintings and other drawings attributed to this fashionable name. Among these are probably suave works by pastellists such as Lenoir or possibly the similarly elusive Vestier.
