

GAMELIN, Jacques

Carcassonne 3.X.1738–12.X.1803

Gamelin was intended to carry on the family business in cloth manufacture. He was sent to Toulouse at the age of 18 to keep accounts for the baron de Puymaurin, but this enlightened amateur recognised Gamelin's artistic talent: he was enrolled at the Académie de Toulouse, studying with Rivalz for five years. By 1761 he had moved to Paris, where he was a pupil at the Académie royale under Deshayes. Gamelin competed for the Prix de Rome unsuccessfully in 1763 and 1764 but nevertheless travelled to Rome with support from Puymaurin. Here he became a professor at the Accademia di San Luca in 1771, and was named painter to Clement XIV. The same year he married Giulia Tridis, not a Venetian aristocrat as an early biographer fancied but the impeccable sister-in-law of the musician with whom Gamelin lodged. The inheritance of his father's substantial fortune permitted him to publish an elaborate anatomical treatise in 1779, but it was disastrous commercially. The following year he established a drawing school at Montpellier. Soon after he moved to Narbonne where he lived until 1796, when he was made professeur de dessin at the École centrale de l'Aude at Carcassonne.

He was mainly known as a history painter, in particular of battles. A sketch of a figure and a single landscape are the only pastels known so far. However he also worked in mixed media in a technique described in the 1784 livret at the salon de Toulouse 1784 as "dessin demi pastel", a mixture of ink, wash, gouache and pastel; several further examples are known. In 1772 he experimented with a painting "sur marbre par pénétration et au feu", while in 1779 his picture in the Flemish manner was "peint sur bois...avec des couleurs préparées d'une nouvelle manière, invention de cet artiste".
