MELLING, Joseph

Saint-Avold 27.XII.1724 – Strasbourg
23.XII.1796

Pupil of Boucher (whose influence is evident in the comparison of Bellamina with the Carnavalet foot) and Carle Van Loo. He was awarded the second (1749) and first (1750) grand prix by the Académie royale in Paris. From 1757 he was court painter at Karlsruhe, where he guided the work of Caroline Luise (q.v.), and seems himself to have been influenced by Liotard. In 1774 he moved to Strasbourg, where, in 1776, he founded and became first director of an école de dessin. In 1784 he helped prepare the posthumous inventory of Caroline Luise's collection after her death in Paris. In 1792–93 he decorated the palais de Rohan in a neo-classical style far removed from his previous work. A pastel of Lili Schönemann (v. Frey) has been attributed to Mellan on the assumption that it is the portrait referred to in a letter from the sitter's mother: "coment se porte donc vôtre portrait fait par Mellin, j'esoère que vous y avez laisse faire quelque corection encore, car je languis de l'avoir bien ressemblant acompagnié de celui de vôtre cher fritz..." but there is nothing here to suggest that that work was in pastel.
