NOËL, Alexandre-Jean

Brie-Comte-Robert 25.VII.1752 – Paris 1834
Pupil of Nicolas-Charles de Silvestre and of his son Jacques-Augustin as well as of Joseph Vernet; a pupil at the Académie royale, he took third prize in 1767, before joining Jean Chappé's scientific expedition to California as illustrator. Noël returned to France in the 1770s and thereafter divided his time between France and Portugal, continuing to make topographical pictures in oil, watercolour and gouache. A report from Lisbon appeared in the London Star, 16.XII.1791:

The Sieur Noel, a French painter, who gained a comfortable livelihood by making drawings of our ports and their environs, has fallen a victim to his rage for Gallic liberty. Having been frequently advised to discontinue his seditious discourses, but in vain, he was seized and put on board a ship on the point of sailing, without inquiring whither. Several of his countrymen have been served in the same manner: which mode our Court adopts without ceremony.

The pastels he left were no doubt influenced by Pillement, but the compositions are in the Vernet genre. He also made two pastel portraits of the future baron de Silvestre, his teachers' grandson and son.

There is confusion with the work of homonyms, including Jules Noël (1815–1881); and a number of the works described as in pastel may in fact be in gouache.
