SILVESTRE, Marie-Louise- Maximilienne de

Paris 14.XII.1707 – Versailles 3.II.1798

Daughter of Louis de Silvestre and Mme de Silvestre (q.n.), by whom she was taught from an early age, soon becoming active as a copyist in pastel and miniature in her father's studio until prevented from pursuing art full time by becoming drawing teacher and lectrice to Marie-Josèphe de Saxe (q.n.); the religious pastel made by the princess was no doubt executed under her guidance. Alone of her servants she was permitted to follow the princesse to France in 1747 after she became dauphine (Maurice de Saxe praised the “sages conseils de Mlle de Silvestre, qui a la confiance de [la Dauphine]”, letter of 26.VIII.1748.) In correspondence with the comte de Wackerbarth from Versailles she kept the Dresden court apprised of her charge's progress as well as of her health. She brought Rotari to the Dauphine's attention; the Italian painter was reported as having seen “de vos ouvrages au pastel en différents endroits, et les a beaucoup estimés.” (letter of 31.VIII.1751). By 1763 her salary for teaching Mesdames was “250 livres par quartier des nourritures conserves” (Newton 2020, p. 4996).

It is possible that Mlle Silvestre was the author of a group of pastels of the sisters of Marie-Josèphe de Saxe from the collection of Graf Brühl seem in Schloß Pförten in 1904, but hung too high to confirm an attribution to La Tour; only one of the dauphine's sister went to France (Marie Christine), so the series cannot be by La Tour.
