VASLET, Lewis

York bpt 13.VI.1742 – Bath .X.1808

Lewis Vaslet was the son of Andrew or André Vaslet (1694–1768), who kept a boarding school for young ladies at the manor in York where, in 1737, he married an Ann Harrison. André's father was the Huguenot school teacher Lewis, Louis, or Ludovici Vaslet (1666–1731), master of Fulham school (later known as Burlington House School) and owner of Fulham House, who “bestowed great pains upon the teaching of the young through a period of 45 years” according to his tombstone; he was naturalized by act of parliament in 1702 (1 Annæ Cap. 80). In 1723 he published a translation from Cellarius, in The Hague; eight years later, a trilingual dictionary, in London. Louis Vaslet's will shows him to have been wealthy, having bought Fulham House from Colonel George Howard as well as well as various properties left to each of his children by his wife, Catherine Testard. One of the daughters, Catherine, was the Mrs Edwards depicted by Hogarth in 1739 (Geneva, mAH). Andrew died in York; his will was proved in 1768. Lewis was baptised at St Olave's, York, 13.VI.1742, and had a number of siblings born in the same city.

Lewis was first an ensign in the army, but he abandoned his military career when stationed in Gibraltar, instead travelling to Italy to study painting. He took up portraiture in oil, pastel and miniature. He sent miniatures to the Royal Academy in 1770 and 1771, from Mr Drybutt's, Panton Square, York. In York he encountered the resident painter Thomas Beckwith (1731–1786), who recorded in a manuscript (quoted by the York historian Robert Davies) that “he succeeded well, and painted several of the gentry in and around York. In 1772 he again visited Italy, and was there in December of that year.” But his presence back in York, with his friend Mason, in .IX.1771 was attested by the Rev. Edward Jones. He returned to York later: the August season, with races and Assembly Room balls, were popular, so that in 1778 he was “much employed in York”; and he appeared there again in 1784 and 1785).

He settled in Bath around 1775, remaining there until the end of his life. From Bath he sent five portraits in unspecified media to the Royal Academy in 1775 and 1782. A Bath directory for 1792 gives the name of William Vaslet, miniature painter, of Walcot Street, possibly an error; while Thicknesse 1778 lists him as a miniature painter in Bladud's Buildings. On 6.II.1776, at St Swithin's Walcot, Bath, Vaslet married Juliet Elizabeth Booth Clarke, from the parish of St Michael's, Bath; despite her name (and the obscure description of one portrait as of “Mrs Vaslet's daughter”), she is described as a spinster. At a meeting on 9.X.1781 the Bath Agriculture &c. Society, it was noted that “Mr Vaslet of this city having presented the Society with a half-length portrait finely executed in Crayons” was elected an honorary member. At the end of the summer in 1783 he advertised from Luppit, near Honiton (Sherborne Mercury, 11.VIII.1783). He advertised paintings in oils, miniature, crayons &c. in the Bath chronicle, 16.VIII.1787, from 43 Walcot Street:

Mr Vaslet likewise paints views of gentlemen's seats etc., also Game, live and dead fish, fruits, flowers, hot house plants and insects etc., so combined and put together as to compose desirable furniture pictures and proper for the ingenious imitation of such ladies who are proficient in drawing needlework embroidery etc.

He was in Birmingham for a month from 1.XI.1790 (Aris's Birmingham Gazette). An advertisement in the Gloucester journal, 22.VI.1795, noted that he was stopping in Gloucester on his way to Cheltenham from Bath; specimens of this work might be seen in his apartments, in the Judge's Lodgings there.

In the Bath journal for 31.V.1797 appeared an advertisement to let “Walcot House” “lately occupied by Mr Vaslet now removing to Argyle Buildings.”

Although he never lived there, he visited Oxford on numerous occasions, including in 1779, 1780, 1789, 1790 and 1796. A group of 14 of his pastels are still at Merton College, Oxford (New Common Room); and further pastels of members of the college are in private collections. It is unclear whether a particular friendship initiated this connection; possibly through an alumnus of Fulham school. In the Oxford journal of 26.II.1780 he announced his return to his apartments at the hotel facing Queen's College, offering miniatures and likenesses in crayons. In a series of advertisements in the Oxford journal in 1796 he announced his arrival (30.I.1796) and then repeatedly declared his intention of leaving the city imminently (14.V.1796, 11, 25.VI.1796), while on 4.II.1797 he offered “likenesses in crayons, oils etc.” to the “gentlemen of the University and the respectable inhabitants of the City and Environs”.

The death of “Mr Vaslet, portrait painter” was announced in the Monthly magazine for 1.XI.1808 (and so presumably took place the previous month, contrary to most sources). Vaslet's will, written in 1806, was proved in London, 16.V.1809. His address was given as Caroline Buildings in the parish of Lyncombe and Widcombe, Somerset: his widow was the main beneficiary, with one Samuel Whitchurch, an ironmonger in Bath, as trustee; his cottage near the canal by Sydney Gardens, Bath is mentioned, as are his brother Thomas Vaslet and nephew, Rev. Joseph Hargrave of York and niece Ann Hargrave, who were married in York in 1760. The Bank of England wills extract records that “Lewis Vaslet of Bath Gent died possessed of £1100” in the Navy 5% stock.

Vaslet established a career as a portraitist making small oval pastels in the manner of Hamilton. Their distinctive compositions often involve head and shoulders at the same ¾ orientation, and many are viewed slightly from below. There are a handful of more ambitious compositions, which also seem to be more highly finished.
